Subject: Professional Reference for Taylor Christianson

To Whom It May Concern,

I am pleased to recommend Taylor Christianson. During Taylor's time at Halfbrick Studios from October 2021 to February 2026, I worked with him both as a direct manager earlier in his tenure and later as a senior stakeholder on the projects he led. In my role as Head of People & Culture, I also had visibility across his work through feedback from the managers and collaborators who worked closely with him.

Taylor progressed quickly and demonstrated a level of ownership and product thinking that stood out early in his career. Within six months he had pitched an original concept, built a working prototype, and demonstrated enough ownership and clarity of vision for the project to be approved for full production. That project became Scryptics, a tactical roguelike that Taylor and a small team developed over several years to public beta on iOS and Android.

What stood out most about Taylor was the degree of ownership he took over the product. He was responsible for much of the game's technical architecture while also contributing heavily to the design and overall product direction. As the project evolved, he took on leadership responsibilities, managing a small team, conducting performance reviews, contributing to compensation recommendations, and regularly communicating progress and decisions with senior leadership.

Taylor consistently demonstrated strong judgment in how he approached both technical and design challenges. At Halfbrick we place a high value on craft and on "finding the fun" in our games, which often requires significant iteration before a mechanic feels right. Taylor embraced that process fully and maintained a high-quality bar throughout development.

He also invested in the growth of the people around him. One of the designers on the project began with limited programming experience and, through Taylor's mentorship and support, finished the project contributing complex systems independently. That willingness to develop teammates while maintaining a strong standard of work is something I consistently heard from those who worked with him.

Based on my direct experience managing Taylor, along with the feedback I received from his team and stakeholders, I recommend him without hesitation. He is a thoughtful developer with strong product instincts who takes genuine ownership of his work and approaches challenges with care and discipline.

Any team that values craftsmanship, sound judgment, and strong product ownership will benefit from having Taylor as part of it.

Please feel free to reach out if additional context about Taylor's work at Halfbrick would be helpful.

Yours sincerely,
